Higher Education Updates

It seems like we frequently start this update saying, “It’s been a busy and inspiring week,” and once again it has been! We started the week by sending out the announcement for the webinar on Case Studies which will be held December 6. Wednesday we held the webinar on Jobs and Internships. We had about 30 people on the Adobe Connect site and more on the phone line. It was a great presentation from the academic and practitioner perspectives, a true representation of the synergy we are looking to create. There was a very good sharing of information and a strong desire to continue the dialogue to create more opportunities for meaningful internships and jobs in the emergency management field. A great thanks to Dr. Brent Cox and Mr. Tal Ehlers for their briefs as well as Dr. Tim DePalma for his update on the Jobs and Internships Special Interest Group (SIG).

The Information Sharing and Symposium Planning SIG is meeting Friday December 2, and the Higher Education Program team is following up with the various research endeavors we started in the past fiscal year. Please remember the SIGs are open to anyone, and we encourage you to participate. In the next couple months we will be reaching out to the SIG leads for 2017 focus group recommendations. This is a great opportunity for the community to emphasize what areas in emergency management higher education need greater attention and action.

This week at FEMA headquarters the Protection and National Preparedness \(PNP\) Office briefed about their roles and responsibilities. It has taken several half days to cover all the offices and components. The Emergency Management Institute and the Higher Education Program are a part of PNP, and it has been extraordinary to see the nexus to higher education, research and analysis mentioned several by PNP components. It was clear to see the importance and value of higher education and all that you do to contribute to the next generation emergency management workforce!
