Higher Education Updates

This week, I am in Chicago at the 2016 National Seminar and Tabletop Exercise for Institutions of Higher Education. It is inspiring to be here with more than 375 people from across our nation's higher education community. The two-day event provides a forum for discussion about campus violence, including active shooter and other threats and the higher education community. The first day consisted of workshops to prepare the community. In these workshops, experts discussed the role of communications, mutual aid, campus resilience, risk assessment, federal support programs and shared case studies. I had the privilege of hosting a session attended by nearly 100 people entitled An Introduction to Access & Function Needs: A discussion, of Including Everyone in Planning for, Responding to and Recovering from Crisis Event. It was a hearty discussion and I received more than 50 business cards and requests to share slides and provide more information. It is awesome to be in the midst of these dedicated professionals.

I am very pleased to share that we have 12 emergency management students serving at this event as volunteers and exercise note takers. Dr. David Ibrahim from University of Illinois Chicago and Dr. Stacey Willett from the University of Akron each provided this opportunity to their students, and it has been an incredible success. The students have been timely, professional and knowledgeable. I look forward to sharing more information about our experience at our webinar coming up November 30th on Jobs and Internships at 2:00-3:30PM (EST). I hope you will be able to join us.
