Australian Emergency Management Institute – Advanced Diploma of Public Safety (Emergency Management)

The Australian Emergency Management Institute (AEMI) is part of the Federal Attorney-General’s Department and is the Centre of Excellence for education, research and training in national emergency management and disaster resilience.

Every year, approximately 3,000 emergency management professionals from across Australia benefit from AEMI’s specialised educational services, while thousands more enjoy the benefits of its extensive range of information products and services off-site and online.

The Advanced Diploma of Public Safety (Emergency Management) is the flagship educational product of AEMI. This nationally-recognised training course is generally undertaken over 2 years full-time (or equivalent) under the tutelage of AEMI’s highly experienced emergency management educators and guest lecturers.

AEMI has designed a program to ensure suitability with knowledge and abilities required in the workplace. Twelve units of competency are required for this qualification including 8 core units and 4 electives units.

Students undertaking the Advanced Diploma will gain greater understanding across the disaster management spectrum of preparedness, response and recovery including community emergency management, coordinating resources for a multi-agency incident and establishing and managing a recovery centre. It is a full fee-paying program.
