Bellevue University – Bachelor of Science in Emergency Management

Emergency Management Professionals who are better equipped for disaster response benefit communities and will be able to lead in times of natural and man-made disasters. Bellevue University's Bachelor of Science in Emergency Management degree will help you to make a difference by organizing disaster preparedness, management, and recovery. The in class or online Emergency Management degree provides you with the in depth knowledge you'll need to pursue or advance a career in law enforcement, emergency services management, as a first responder, in public administration, or safety and security within both the public and private sectors.

Through our building-block approach, you will develop a comprehensive skill set and understand the critical cycle of emergency disaster management: Mitigation, Preparedness, Response and Recovery.

Guided by faculty with real world experience, you will examine issues in emergency management such as:

- Natural and human-caused disasters
- Terrorism and counter terrorism
- Command structure
- Risk assessment
- Policies and procedures
- Emergency planning and exercise design
- Legal issues
- Technology and communications
