

California University of Pennsylvania – Master’s Degree in Legal Studies with Homeland Security Concentration

California University of Pennsylvania is offering a Master’s Degree in Legal Studies with a Homeland Security concentration. This program concentrates on the study of the legal and policy issues in homeland security. Students learn the basics of legal research, constitutional issues, ethics, and policy analysis and then apply these acquired skills toward the study of topics listed in the homeland security concentration. Students select related electives from those listed for the program according to their interests. This provides a unique homeland security program where the primary emphasis is the study of homeland security law and policy, rather than just the process and structure of the homeland security industry. The Homeland Security Concentration prepares students to tackle the many challenges inherent in the protection of a nation.

Cal U's Master in Legal Studies: Homeland Security Concentration can be completed in three semesters or at a pace of the student's own choosing. Courses are offered in eight-week terms, with two terms per semester. Students may choose to take one or two three-credit hour courses per term. Students may enter this flexible program at the beginning of any semester.
