Immaculata University – Bachelor of Science in Emergency Planning and Management

With a Bachelor of Science in Emergency Planning & Management (EPM) you will be prepared to help others by planning and directing disaster response or crisis management activities, providing disaster preparedness training, and creating emergency plans and procedures for natural and man-made disasters. As an emerging leader in emergency management, graduates understand the role of governments at every level, plan effectively, assess vulnerability, and manage the distribution of resources during a crisis.

Immaculata University’s bachelor's of science in Emergency Planning & Management is primarily a degree-completion program designed for working adults, but also provides academic pathways for full-time students. Using various delivery formats, students can create customized schedules that include both classroom and on-line courses. Accelerated courses are taught in a blended format and can be completed in seven- or eight-week terms. While an internship is not required, the program will help place students who are interested in work-study opportunities of one to three credits. Students also have the option to complete a research project for credit and can be recognized for academic excellence through Immaculata's chapter of the Order of Sword & Shield honor society.

Applicants may obtain college credits for prior learning through military education, technical training, and professional programs. Testing through exams such as CLEP or DANTES (Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support) are acceptable ways of earning college credits for prior learning. Each student’s experiences are managed on a case-by-case basis.

Immaculata's EPM students bring a diverse range of backgrounds that include careers as first-responders and in the military, but there are also new perspectives offered by career-changers interested in a new and fulfilling job helping others build resiliency and manage disasters.
