University of Central Missouri (UCM) – Undergraduate Certificates

The Crisis and Disaster Management program at the University of Central Missouri created four stand-alone online Undergraduate Certificates in 2013. Areas of study include:

• Business Continuity
• Emergency Management
• Emergency Services Management
• Environmental Hazards

Why should you choose a certificate?

Certificates in crisis and disaster management are taught online. You can fit your coursework around your busy work and family commitments. It only takes four classes to successfully complete an undergraduate certificate in one of the CDM areas of study. Students considering pursuing an undergraduate degree in Crisis and Disaster Management can transfer their courses into the degree program with no loss of credits. You can quickly build your credentials while maintaining your current employment.

Current students pursuing a major can add a complementary field of study without adding total hours to their degree. A certificate requires less hours than a major, while filling available electives and helping meet the upper division requirement. The CDM certificates complement many majors, including business, science, political science, criminal justice, and occupational safety.

Certificates can also assist you in preparing for professional certifications in several fields. If you already hold a professional certification, our certificates can be used to cost-effectively maintain your certification by providing the continuing professional development expected of practicing certified professionals.

Working professionals should also consider completing a certificate. CDM certificates provide up-to-date solutions addressing many of the challenges facing organizations today.

The University of Central Missouri is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools.
